Viking Story Features Key:

Classical roleplaying game with a randomly selected map each time you start the game
Roleplaying-outcome-dependent behavior modeling means there will never be a situation where you can always win
Development of a unity-independent game logic makes the game easier to continue after it has been removed from the device you are playing on
Looks great on HiDPI devices

The combat system is based on the concepts of wargames. It is considered to be completely novel as in the European wargames law it is allowed that the player of the winner-carries-all get only the game pieces of the defeated to his team and not all the others too

Players interacting with each other via vk group chats sets it apart from all the other games which only lets the players talk and plan the game, but it doesn't technically have chat features

The probabilities given by the game definition (like to let you choose between several deceleration classes) and the emergency not being in cahoots with the enemies and also not knowing their strategies (this gives an edge to the cunning player) sets it apart as well
